

Moving from Traditional to Roth IRA

What's the difference between a Traditional and Roth IRA and what should you consider when thinking of converting?

Questions	Factors to consider
Do you qualify to convert funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Guessing incorrectly may have serious consequences; the conversion of funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA is considered a taxable distribution, subject to federal income tax and a possible penalty. • The fact that you qualify to convert funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA doesn't necessarily mean you should; consider the following factors before making a decision.
Will you pay the tax that results from converting funds with outside (non-IRA) funds?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Converting traditional IRA funds to a Roth IRA will result in federal income tax due on those funds (to the extent that those funds consist of investment earnings and tax-deductible contributions). • Paying the tax due with IRA funds reduces the amount that grows tax free in the Roth IRA. • IRA funds used to pay the tax may be subject to additional income tax and possibly a penalty. • Paying the tax due with non-IRA funds allows more dollars to be funneled into the tax-free Roth IRA.
Do you expect to be in the same or in a lower or higher income tax bracket when you eventually take IRA distributions?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • If your tax bracket remains the same and you pay the tax that results from converting funds with IRA dollars, the conversion may have no tax consequence. • If you'll be in a lower tax bracket when you take IRA distributions, paying tax now on converted funds at your present (higher) rate may not be very appealing. • If you'll be in a higher tax bracket when you take distributions, you can convert funds to a Roth IRA now and pay tax at your present (lower) tax rate, and distributions will be tax free later (assuming you qualify for tax-free withdrawals--see below).
Can you leave your funds in your Roth IRA for at least 5 years?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • If you withdraw funds after 5 years from the time you establish any Roth IRA you may qualify for tax-free and penalty-free withdrawals if you meet one of several other conditions (a qualified withdrawal). • If you convert a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA, and then make a nonqualified withdrawal within 5 years of the conversion, the earnings you withdraw will be subject to income tax, and your entire withdrawal may be subject to a 10% penalty unless an exception applies (age 59½, etc.).

Continued...

Questions	Factors to consider
Can you leave your funds in your Roth IRA for at least 10 years?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • This time frame becomes more important when you're paying the tax that results from converting funds with IRA funds. • Generally, converting funds to a Roth IRA makes sense if you plan to leave the funds in the Roth IRA for 10 years or more. • If you plan to take distributions from the Roth IRA within the next 10 years, make sure converting funds is in your best interest.
Can you live comfortably in retirement without taking IRA distributions? Does your traditional IRA consist of any nondeductible (after-tax) contributions? When you die, will federal estate tax be due?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • You can keep contributing to the Roth IRA after age 72, as long as you have sufficient earned income. • Unlike a traditional IRA, you aren't required to take annual minimum distributions from a Roth IRA after age 72 or at any time during your life. • Assuming 5 years have elapsed from the time you established any Roth IRA, your beneficiary receives Roth IRA funds free from federal income tax (but not necessarily from federal estate tax) when you die. • You've already paid federal income tax on any nondeductible contributions to your traditional IRA, so these dollars are not subject to federal income tax when you convert funds to a Roth IRA. • After you convert funds, future investment earnings on your Roth IRA will accrue tax free. • When you die, the value of your IRA (traditional or Roth) will be included in your taxable estate to determine if federal estate tax is due. • When you convert funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA, you pay federal income tax on your IRA funds now rather than later. • The money you use to pay the tax now effectively removes those dollars from your taxable estate, potentially reducing your federal estate tax liability after your death.
Will you apply for financial aid in the next few years?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • When you convert funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA, you pay federal income tax on your IRA funds now rather than later. • The money you use to pay the tax now effectively removes those dollars from the assets to be considered in determining your child's eligibility for financial aid.
Are you currently receiving Social Security benefits?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The portion of your Social Security benefits that is taxable in any year depends on your income and tax filing status for that year. • Excluding any nondeductible contributions, funds that you convert to a Roth IRA are treated as taxable income to you for that year. • If more of your Social Security benefits will be taxed as a result of converting funds to a Roth IRA, factor in the additional tax cost to you. • Balance this cost against the fact that distributions from Roth IRAs, in addition to being tax free, are not currently counted in determining the taxable portion of your Social Security benefits.

Continued...

Questions	Factors to consider
Does your state follow the federal income tax treatment of Roth IRAs?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • If your state does not follow the federal income tax treatment of Roth IRAs, you must factor in the way that your state tax treatment will affect your situation.
Does your state provide Roth IRAs with protection from creditors equal to that provided to traditional IRAs?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Up to $1,512,350 (and in some cases more) of your total IRA assets, Roth and traditional, are protected under federal law in the event you declare bankruptcy. State law may provide additional creditor protection, but the protection given to funds in Roth IRAs may be less than that given to funds in traditional IRAs. • If you have a significant percentage of your assets in IRAs and you are at risk of being sued by creditors, you should consider your state's degree of creditor protection for each type of IRA.

If you participate in a 401(k), 403(b), or 457(b) plan at work, you may be able to make Roth contributions to the plan. (Check with your plan administrator -- plans aren't required to offer this option.) Qualified distributions of Roth contributions and related earnings are income tax free (and penalty free) at the federal level. This may be a factor in your decision of whether to convert funds from a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. However, be sure to discuss your situation with a tax professional before making any decisions.

IMPORTANT DISCLOSURES: Broadridge Investor Communication Solutions, Inc. does not provide investment, tax, legal, or retirement advice or recommendations. The information presented here is not specific to any individual's personal circumstances. To the extent that this material concerns tax matters, it is not intended or written to be used, and cannot be used, by a taxpayer for the purpose of avoiding penalties that may be imposed by law. Each taxpayer should seek independent advice from a tax professional based on his or her individual circumstances. These materials are provided for general information and educational purposes based upon publicly available information from sources believed to be reliable — we cannot assure the accuracy or completeness of these materials. The information in these materials may change at any time and without notice.

This material was created for educational and informational purposes only and is not intended as ERISA, tax, legal or investment advice. If you are seeking investment advice specific to your needs, such advice services must be obtained on your own separate from this educational material.

Securities and advisory services are offered through LPL Financial (LPL), a registered investment advisor and broker-dealer (member FINRA/SIPC).

Insurance products are offered through LPL or its licensed affiliates. Rockland Trust Company and RT Investment Services are not registered as a broker-dealer or investment advisor. Registered representatives of LPL offer products and services using RT Investment Services, and may also be employees of Rockland Trust Company. These products and services are being offered through LPL or its affiliates, which are separate entities from, and not affiliates of, Rockland Trust Company or RT Investment Services. Securities and insurance offered through LPL or its affiliates are:

Not Insured by FDIC or Any Other Government Agency / Not Rockland Trust Guaranteed / Not Rockland Trust Deposits or Obligations / May Lose Value for more information or to schedule an appointment with our Investment Team, scan the QR code here:

RT INVESTMENT SERVICES